Did you know?

What are guajolotas or esquites?

There is no doubt that when you arrive to Mexico City and take an early walk, you realize that the most crowded spots, whether is near the Subway, corporate offices, shops or almost in every corner, are street vendors with aluminum barrels and a big bag of bolillos (bread rolls). Those cans are full of tamales and atole champurrado (chocolate cornflour drink).

Tips for Expats

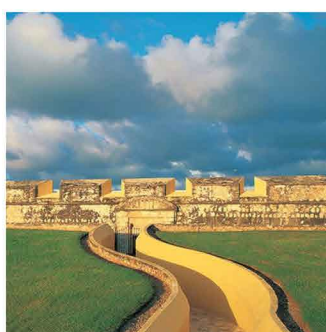

The Expat Wife

The role of an expat wife is much more complex, even more, if she also is a mother. She must get involved in each aspect of the new living country, from the most important matters like, choosing the best education for kids, a place to live, meet supermarkets, operation of public services, to the least important but still important, which is to start making new friends and if it's the case, learn a new language.

Getaway of the Month

Campeche

Campeche, which is in Ciudad del Carmen, is a colonial fairyland its walled city center a tight enclave of perfectly restored pastel buildings, narrow cobblestone streets, fortified ramparts and well-preserved mansions. When you decide to visit, you have to go first to Ciudad del Carmen, and from there you could rent a car to get to its State Capital. This is a nice journey since it is a straight road.
